Mediators in the Church

From the October United Christian Church Newsletter, by Earlene Hodgson and Dale Reed.

From the Administrator

VORP is one example of restorative justice in action. VORP's process is one of many variations of victim offender dialogue in use around the world. Victim Offender Mediation Association (VOMA) is having its annual conference in Nashville as you receive this newsletter. VOMA has members from all over North America and around the world. What all VOMA members have in common is a commitment to victim offender dialogue.

The primary difference among the variations of victim offender dialogue is who leads the meeting. The model developed in New Zealand for juvenile dependency and youth offenses uses a full-time professional youth counselor as facilitator of the process. The Australian model, known for the city of its birth as the Wagga Wagga model, has a police officer as facilitator. The third model is the one used by our VORP in Fresno, in which a community volunteer leads the process.

The facilitator makes a difference in these victim offender dialogues, and the values of the facilitator can have a significant impact on the experience. Fresno VORP mediators are committed to creating a climate in which reconciliation can occur, rather than being focused on restitution or diversion from court. As we study the practices of victim offender dialogue practitioners around the world, we continue to be committed to our focus on reconciliation, even as we continue to improve our model based on the experiences of others. As we share our model in national and international settings, we receive affirmation for our focus. It's great work to be in, and you are part of it as you support us with your time and money. Thanks!

Have you heard of our involvement in VORP? Do you know what it is? Have you wondered how the Victim Offender Reconciliation Program, for which some of our members have trained, is working? Carroll Cotton and Dale Reed, who have been working with VORP, have just concluded a case involving three 17 year old boys who broke into a school and stole sports equipment, a computer and printer and some other items.

Dale and Carroll met with each of the offenders and their parents or guardians. They met one offender at our church and the other two boys in their homes. At these meetings they obtained permission to set up a meeting with the victim (school) to try to reconcile the differences between them and the victim. Dale and Carroll then met at the school with the principal, and he agreed to meet with the offenders and their guardians.

On Friday, September 19, Carroll and Dale, the offenders and their guardians, and the principal gathered at the school for a reconciliation meeting. The principal talked to the boys and indicated some things that he required to make him feel right. The boys then explained to the principal the nature of their crime and how they wanted to do whatever was required to "fix" things. A very good agreement was reached with all parties feeling satisfied that they had been heard and the issue settled.

After the meeting, Dale and Carroll said they felt that God was really smiling on them that day and that they had done God's work.

Please spread the word about VORP through your church newsletter. Ask members of your congregation to pray for VORP, you could tell a mediation story, advertise our training dates and encourage donations.
